LAND for TOMORROW CONSERVATION YEARBOOK 2015

About LAND for TOMORROW

Land for Tomorrow is a statewide coalition of community leaders, conservation and outdoors organizations, businesses, and local governments with a common goal: increasing land and water conservation in North Carolina. The coalition works to ensure that the state's conservation trust funds – Clean Water Management Trust Fund (CWMTF), Parks and Recreation Trust Fund (PARTF) and the Agricultural Development and Farmland Preservation Trust Fund (ADFPTF) are well-funded.

The creation and consistent funding of North Carolina's conservation trust funds have been the result of bipartisan forward-thinking leadership over the past 27 years. This smart leadership has resulted in the preservation of hundreds of thousands of acres of family farms, forests, stream banks, game lands, parks, greenways and trails. Conservation has kept many areas natural, providing clean air and drinking water, flood control, and recreational opportunities for North Carolina families. These land protection successes have also played a major role in the state's economy, boosting agriculture, the military, tourism, forestry, hunting, fishing and wildlife-watching.

Land and water conservation has always been a bipartisan issue – flourishing no matter what party was in charge. That's because it is supported by such a wide range of people – hunters, anglers, business people and many others who understand that land and water conservation is crucial to North Carolina's wellbeing. This year's Conservation Year Book will introduce you to some of these "faces of conservation."

NORTH CAROLINA'S CONSERVATION TRUST FUNDS

North Carolina has three publicly funded conservation trust funds.

The Clean Water Management Trust Fund (CWMTF) is a primary source of grants for hundreds of local governments, state agencies and conservation nonprofits to address water pollution and protect clean water supplies. NOTE: For many years the state also had a separate Natural Heritage Trust Fund (NHTF) that protected land that is home to rare species, important wildlife habitat and significant cultural sites. The NHTF was merged with CWMTF in 2013.

The Parks and Recreation Trust Fund (PARTF) supports improvements in the state's park system and provides dollar-for-dollar matching grants to local governments for parks and improvements to public beach and estuarine access, which are important to local tourism economies. PARTF is the main source of funding for most state park improvements and land acquisition to create new parks or expand existing ones.

The Agricultural Development and Farmland Preservation Trust Fund (ADFPTF) supports public and private enterprise programs that promote sustainable agricultural, horticultural and forestland activities. It also funds conservation easements on farms, forests and horticultural lands to preserve the land, enable long-term production of food and fiber and allow landowners to maintain ownership of their family lands.

FACES OF CONSERVATION

Ruth Samuelson

Ruth Samuelson, Former Legislator and Mecklenburg County Commissioner

There's No Alternative for Clean Water

When Ruth Samuelson was growing up in Mecklenburg County, she spent many an hour in Little Sugar Creek – playing and building “frog houses” with her friends. But, Little Sugar Creek changed a few decades later – becoming too polluted for anyone to play in or around its waters.

Samuelson, working as a county commissioner and later as a State Representative, helped to change that situation. Today, Little Sugar Creek is once again a place for families to visit, its restoration the result of investment by local governments and the state's Clean Water Management Trust Fund.

Today Samuelson and her family are active users of the Little Sugar Creek Greenway. “We’ve even fished there,” she says. “But, without much success.”

Samuelson notes that the recreational opportunities provided by land and water conservation are important to the economic and public health of all people. “The younger generation of employees wants open space and water access for recreational purposes,” she says. “The retiring population is also attracted to it when looking to relocate in new communities. Both are good for our economy.”

Jim Whitehurst, Red Hat CEO

Conservation is Crucial to Attracting the Best and the Brightest

Red Hat is an international leader when it comes to computer software. That means the company must attract highly educated, young professionals who are in high demand. To stay on top, Red Hat has to appeal to those men and women. Red Hat CEO Jim Whitehurst says the quality of life found in the community is an important part of that appeal.

“Our biggest competition isn’t for our customers, it’s for the best talent,” he explains. “The best and brightest have their choice of where to work – both companies and locations. More and more, we are finding that quality of life is a major determinant of where top talent chooses to live and work. I am constantly asked by people we are recruiting about the recreational opportunities in North Carolina.”

That’s why Whitehurst, who sits on the Board of Directors for The Conservation Fund, supports public funding for land and water conservation. “NC is situated in a great area that spans mountains to beaches, but we need to ensure that some of those areas are preserved and accessible for recreational use,” he says.

Despite the fact that he works in a high-tech business, Whitehurst says getting out in nature is important for everyone’s wellbeing. “I live and work in the hectic high tech world. It is exciting and fast paced, but also exhausting. My kids live a similar life – with iPads at school and video games at home,” he explains. “Some of our highest quality family time is when we are able to get away from it all. Being in nature allows our family to build special, deeper bonds. It gives us time to reflect, but also be together without the myriad distractions on our normal everyday lives.”

His love of nature began with his grandfathers and parents fishing and hiking as a family. “I’ve been lucky enough to be able to do this with my kids. Going forward, I want to make sure that I can do the same with my grandchildren,” he concludes. “And I want to make sure that others who may not have the same capacity to ‘hop on a plane’ also have those opportunities nearby to where they live.”

Thomas A. Gorry, Brigadier General, U.S. Marine Corps

Jeffrey M. Sanborn, Colonel, US Army

Land Conservation Crucial to Military Preparedness

State conservation trust fund dollars always leverage additional money.

One of the big sources of those dollars has been the U.S. Defense Department. North Carolina's military installations have benefited as land around them was protected – more than 45,000 acres around Camp Lejeune and 16 miles of base boundary around Fort Bragg.

"Efforts to buffer and connect Army and State lands are a perfect example of how the United States Army and the State of North Carolina, through its trust funds, have worked together for common goals," Bragg Garrison Commander Colonel Jeffrey M. Sanborn wrote in 2013 to Gov. Pat McCrory.

Camp Lejeune's Commanding General Thomas A. Gorry also wrote Gov. McCrory to register his support. "For several years the military has worked collaboratively with the State of North Carolina to promote conservation and compatible land use in the vicinity of military installations and other areas in which we train," he said. "These partnering projects rely heavily on state conservation funding as a match and/or leverage to the funds provided by the military and other sources."

North Carolina is a leader in conservation funding around military bases, largely because it has had the state trust funds to leverage the military dollars. Without those matching dollars, it is likely that the Defense Department money will go to other states. With the next round of decisions looming regarding base realignment and closure, it is more important than ever that the state continue to fund protection of buffers around military bases to ensure there are no incompatible uses that could compromise the military mission or threaten the bases' existence.

Colonel Sanborn says that protecting the state trust funds is crucial for everyone involved. "As our military installations continue to grow, bringing more good jobs to North Carolina, the development pressures around Fort Bragg and Camp Mackall will only intensify. Our collective partnership will help mitigate these effects, and will help ensure that Fort Bragg's training mission and North Carolina's naturally and culturally significant areas are protected for years to come."

Mike Szulak, Hunter Hunters Depend on Land and Water Conservation

As an avid hunter, Mike Szulak supports land and water conservation. "By being an outdoorsman I feel that I am also a conservationist by default. I would not be able to enjoy many of my favorite outdoor activities such as turkey, deer and waterfowl hunting in addition to freshwater and saltwater fishing and hiking," he explains. "I'm passionate about being able to participate in these activities and without land conservation it would be more difficult to do them with regularity."

Szulak grew up in Wake County and is a member of the Wake County Wildlife Club. "Some of my best memories with my friends have been created while hunting on the natural places of North Carolina," he says. "My peer group is passionate about the outdoors and has created some of the most memorable times while chasing spring gobblers, hunting elusive mature bucks during the fall, and pursuing the multiple waterfowl species at our disposal."

Many of Szulak's favorite outdoor spots – including a number of game lands across the state, exist because of investments from the state's conservation trust funds. He is also quick to point out that conserved lands are important to the economy. "These resources provide recreational businesses such as fishing charters, hunting guides and outfitters with the resources they need to thrive and stimulate the local economy. Without the natural places preserve by land and water conservation, both local government and private business would be negatively impacted."

Alex Bernhardt,
Chairman
Bernhardt Furniture
Employees Need and Deserve a Good Quality of Life

Bernhardt Furniture celebrated its 125th anniversary last year. Bernhardt Chairman Alex Bernhardt says the secret to the company's success is a quality work force, which is directly tied to quality of life. Bernhardt, who serves on The Nature Conservancy's board, says conserving land and water is crucial to that quality of life.

"Bernhardt Furniture employs over a thousand associates in western North Carolina.

Creating a good quality of life for those people includes providing access to quality outdoor experiences. Many of those employees picnic, camp and swim in the Wilson Creek Wild and Scenic River area, which is affordable and accessible," he explains.

Bernhardt says conservation is also personal. "I have lived and worked in these mountains for my seven decades and choose to live here largely because of the area's natural beauty," he adds. "Since my Boy Scout days, I have loved all my experiences here and have tried to practice conservation at every opportunity."

"Clean and available water is necessary to support every kind of business and the families that work for them," he explains. "There is no alternative form of water as there is with energy. A certain amount of open space is necessary to provide clean and adequate water supplies."

John Robbins, Investor,
Developer and Fisherman
Conservation is Good for People and Their Pocketbooks

Nature has always been important to John Robbins, both personally and professionally. Robbins, an investor and developer, is also a passionate conservationist. He is an avid outdoorsman who chairs the North Carolina Wildlife Federation's Board of Directors.

He strongly believes that land conservation is good for business. He is a proponent of the NC Wildlife Federation's Wildlife Friendly Development Program, which safeguards vital wildlife habitat in new developments. "We make the highest and best use of land if we are preserving its natural resources," he says. "People fail to appreciate the cost of degradation – water pollution, construction runoff, loss of critical wildlife habitat and poor use of common areas. If we fail to conserve, then we are imposing additional costs on ourselves and future generations. These costs are very real."

Birds of prey fascinate Robbins. One of his fondest memories is of locating a great horned owl on the site of what was to become his first subdivision; one where, like others, he worked hard to preserve natural habitat. He named his business Greathorn Properties as a result of that encounter.

Robbins firmly believes wildlife and its habitat is an important economic asset of the state and that the obligation to conserve applies to the state. As he recognizes, the NC Constitution states: "It shall be the policy of this State to conserve and protect its lands and waters for the benefit of all its citizenry."

"That's a pretty clear mandate," says Robbins. "Preserving land and water is good for today, and it is good for my children and their children. It is also a legal and moral obligation for us all."

Donna Girardot, Former Executive Officer of the Wilmington-Cape Fear Home Builders Association

Land and Water Vital to Home Building, Real Estate Industry

Donna Girardot says after working for 18 years in real estate and homebuilding she views land and water conservation as vital to those two industries. "I have seen the demand on the part of the homebuyer and the desire on the part of the homebuilder to preserve and enhance the environment – treating it as one more amenity, expected and taken for granted, no different than a club house, swimming pool or tennis court."

Girardot is the former Executive Officer of the Wilmington-Cape Fear Home Builders Association and Founder and CEO of the Business Alliance for a Sound Economy (BASE). She currently serves on the Wilmington International Airport Board and is Vice Chairman of the New Hanover County Planning Board.

Her experience has also taught her that quality of life is a major factor in site selection decisions.

"Sustainability is now a permanent part of 70 percent of corporate agendas. Most companies consider green practices to be vital to remaining competitive and many affirm that these practices are contributing to profits," she explains. "North Carolina is proof that environmental protection and corporate responsibility go hand-in-hand."

Girardot understands why people choose to live near parks or greenways, because she relishes her own time outdoors. "My favorite place to visit on weekends year-round is Masonboro Island Reserve. We live across from the Carolina Beach Inlet so it's an easy trip. Once we pull the boat up on shore, we hike to the ocean side to enjoy the ocean breezes, swim and sometimes, if we're lucky, watch a dolphin and spend a relaxing day in the sun!"

Tony Doster, NC Regional Manager for Resource Management Service and Chair of the Cape Fear Arch Conservation Collaboration

Healthy, Productive Forests are Important

As a professional forester, Tony Doster likes to say that he "isn't just farming trees, he is also stewarding ecosystems." Doster says that healthy forest land is crucial to the future of his industry, which has traditionally played a large role in the state's economy.

"It's in our interest to make that sure that the lands we manage are healthy and productive," he explains. "That includes not just the soils and the trees, but the clean water we produce, and the wildlife habitat our lands provide. Land conservation is just part of what we do to keep the forests we manage healthy."

Doster says he understands firsthand the benefits of conserving forest land. One of his favorite places to visit is an area on Town Creek in Brunswick County that has been protected with a Clean Water Management Trust Fund conservation easement. "The land protected by these easements is perhaps the most unique piece of land in Brunswick County, with upland pines, bottomland hardwoods, swamps, and hills and ridges. It's a beautiful piece of land, and I get a lot of joy from visiting it to camp or hike."

On the other end of the state, he enjoys Snowbird Creek in the Nantahala National Forest, where he goes trout fishing with friends and family. "Telling lies around a fire after fishing all day generates some special memories for me."

Kelly Darden,
Outdoorsman
Mother Nature Doesn't Play Favorites

Kelly Darden likes to say that he grew up in Mayberry. Actually, it was Greenville, North Carolina during the fifties and sixties, when Greenville was very much a town, not a city. "Hunting and fishing were just the things that you did," he says.

"The great outdoors didn't care about my looks, athletic expertise, my financial status, or whether I was popular in school," he adds. "I didn't need a playmate. Mother Nature was always there for me."

Darden, who is Vice Chair of the North Carolina Wildlife Federation Board of Directors, still spends a great deal of time hunting and fishing. Those activities have also played a large role in his career. He is a former host of "Outdoor Moments" on the Outdoor Channel. "It was a very enlightening experience – getting to hunt and fish for a living," he says.

And, he was a pioneer. "If you are flipping through channels and you see people hunting elk or fishing for salmon, you typically don't see minorities."

Hunting and fishing are inextricably tied to land and water conservation. Game animals need territory to roam. Fish need clean water. "Water and land are the most fundamental elements of life," says Darden. "There is a need to conserve large tracts of land and the waters that flow through them. The masses of Americans don't own huge tracts of land. They need places to hunt and fish – to visit Mother Nature. That's why it is important the government help fund conservation."

Rickie White, Farmer
Bringing Local Products to Urban Markets

When Rickie White was a kid, he learned about farming from his grandmother in the small textile town of Bessemer City in the North Carolina foothills. "Farming skipped a generation," he says. "Both my grandparents grew up on farms, but my parents didn't farm."

Four years ago, White and his spouse began producing herbal teas, cut flowers and produce at Waterdog Farms in Person County – ten acres along a branch of the Flat River – good habitat for a large and unique salamander called the Neuse River Waterdog.

"We were looking for a place that was close to key farmers' markets and places that we could sell our products, but was far enough away so we could afford the amount of land that we needed to farm," he explains. "We were really interested in being part of the local food movement and trying to find ways to bring more local products into our urban markets."

White says the availability of large tracts of land so close to a metropolitan area is only going to shrink, although the economic downturn slowed things a bit. "At the time we began farming, there were a lot of small developments that were platted out near the farm but didn't have houses in them. Those are starting to fill in. Once they fill in, we expect the demand to be higher."

White hopes that others will continue to farm locally. He says the experience has been a good one. "I like hearing from our customers about how much they enjoy our products. Last year, we had customers who couldn't stop talking about our chamomile and how wonderful it was. This wasn't something they could get in a store. I take a lot of pride in the fact that we are producing products that are fresher, higher quality and harvested with more care than what you can buy in the grocery store."

Summer Higdon, Student and Hunter

Being Outdoors Shaped Her Future

Summer Higdon spent her childhood in her Matthews, North Carolina backyard – whether it was watching her dad garden while sneaking ripe blueberries from the bush in the summertime, jumping in piles of leaves in the fall, or sledding in the winter. “It was in my backyard, my little slice of nature tucked in among roads and houses outside of the largest city in North Carolina that I learned to truly appreciate wild things,” she says. “It only took an acre and a half of natural space to permanently capture my fascination.” Today, she is continuing her quest to keep that inner child alive – “constantly exploring and learning.” She is a recent graduate of NCSU with a degree in wildlife biology. Thanks to that early exposure to nature, she plans to make a career outside.

She also spends a lot of her spare time in nature – hiking, hunting, fishing, or just hanging out. “I enjoy hiking trails that I can find near cities,” she says. “The Four Mile Creek Greenway, which weaves its way through Matthews, is just a fence climb and a creek hop from my backyard,” she explains. That greenway is part of the Carolina Thread Trail, a network that goes through 15 counties in North and South Carolina, much of which has been funded by government conservation dollars.

Higdon recently became a licensed North Carolina hunter, or “huntress,” as she prefers. “Propped up at the base of a tree, a weapon in hand, I am a piece of nature rather than an observer. The sunrises and sunsets are always more beautiful and the woods more alive from that vantage point than any other I’ve experienced.”

Hunters have benefited from North Carolina’s public conservation funds. Thousands of acres of new game lands have been created through that investment. Higdon says those hunters are putting delicious game on their tables, but they also benefit from the experience in nature, regardless of the success of the hunting trip.

She didn’t bag any ducks during a recent hunt in Bladen County, but the experience was amazing. “I had never seen and heard so many ducks in my life. Who knew duck wings could make such a sound as they zoom overhead? I was leaned up against a cypress tree in waist-deep water with numb feet and I couldn’t help but smile every time I heard those wings. We supposed we must have seen 500 or more ducks that morning. That duck hunt is the best reason I’ve ever had to be up before the sun.”

Chuck Millsaps,
President, Great
Outdoor Provision
Company

Children Need Places to Play

Chuck Millsaps remembers a time when being outside changed his life. He recalls the thrill as he rode his 1968 Schwinn Sting-Ray, a “banana seat bomber,” to where the sidewalk ended at Charlotte’s Sugar Creek Wastewater Treatment Plant. “It was an adventure, which sparked a wildfire of exploration as we flew down poison ivy-covered trails through a wilderness of kudzu, cicadas and stream beds.”

The President of Great Outdoor Provision Co. worries today that children aren’t making that same connection to the outdoors. “People need time in nature for their health, happiness, and wellbeing,” he explains. “But, increasingly children and families are living their lives indoors.”

That’s why Millsaps and his company support conservation – donating a percentage of sales on National Trails Days to local land trusts. Those donations help to match government dollars. “We chose local land trusts as the beneficiary because they acquire land for protection through purchase in the open real estate market or by gift, thereby guaranteeing that the most endangered lands of greatest importance to local communities and regions are protected,” he says.

Memories of those long ago bike rides in Charlotte, coupled with camping trips in Linville Gorge, crabbing off the North Carolina coast and fly fishing in Western North Carolina are important to Millsaps. He says that increasing public conservation funding, coupled with the support from businesses such as his, will ensure that young people growing up today have similar memories decades down the road.

Donald Huggins, Attorney

Preserving Farms is Important to Everyone

Donald Huggins grew up in Fuquay Varina, but often returned to the Craven County farm where his father grew up. Today he worries about the loss of agricultural land and open space. “I am an avid sportsman. I spend the majority of my free time hunting and fishing,” he says. “Much of the land that we lease for hunting is agricultural. But, we’ve lost some of our leases. People are selling out. Some of the areas that I hunt in are in the process of being annexed.”

Today, Huggins is an attorney practicing law and living in Wake County. “I look at the growth, especially around RDU and all the open space that has been developed around Fuquay, Apex and Cary. There are new subdivisions popping up all the time – farmland and open space being converted into subdivisions. Not only does this mean less land in crop production, but the implications of new development on clean water are also huge—sewage, fertilizer runoff, etc.”

Huggins supports land and water conservation because he is concerned about the future. “We need farmland to feed people. We would be remiss to think these problems are isolated to North Carolina. Therefore we must do our part as a state to be part of the solution and not the problem,” he says. “You are also seeing a big local foods movement, even local beer and a trend towards organic. With the organic movement, new farmers are trending toward smaller spaces – five or 10 acres of land. We must change the way we think in order to stay ahead of the problem.”

Huggins says that keeping that land agricultural is important to all North Carolinians. “It is important to everyone. Sometimes my fellow sportsmen are at odds with the other side who they may view as tree huggers,” he explains. “But we both enjoy and need a clean environment. We all want to secure our future – everyone needs clean water and open space. It doesn’t matter if you drive a pickup or a Prius, everyone needs clean water.”

Ted and Herman Hoilman, Farmers

200 Years of Tradition Continues Because of Conservation

The Hoilmans live on the south side of Avery County's Big Yellow Mountain, which is an Appalachian Bald – high grasslands that have existed for millennia. As Ted Hoilman, one of 12 siblings raised in the area, likes to put it, "We live 4,000 feet below our cows."

His brother Herman says that the Hoilmans settled in the rough area around the Roan Mountain Highlands because "they were too ornery to settle down elsewhere."

It isn't ornerness that has kept the Hoilmans attached to Big Yellow for all these years. It is a love of the place. Even today, many of their children and grandchildren have chosen to stay in the area. Only one of Herman's and Ted's siblings moved elsewhere for a long period of time, and he eventually came back when he retired. Ted Hoilman says in a lifetime of more than six and a half decades, the longest he has been away from Big Yellow is two weeks.

The Hoilman family has grazed cattle on the top of Big Yellow since the early 1800's. When they got word back in 1975 that The Nature Conservancy and the Southern Appalachian Highlands Conservancy were going to buy the top of Big Yellow, Herman says the Hoilmans thought those two conservancy groups were "going to take away what we had been about here at Big Yellow." The Hoilmans feared that they – and their cattle – would be banned from the windswept bald so many of them had known so well for so long. "We were heartbroken, we didn't know anything about The Nature Conservancy," he adds.

But, the conservancies and the Hoilmans shared a common goal – preserving Big Yellow as a bald – not allowing it to become covered in a thicket of bushes. The best way to keep it in its "bald" state was for the Hoilmans to continue their cattle grazing tradition on top of Big Yellow. More than 30 years later, Herman now says that conservation is the "best thing to ever happen to these mountains."

What follows is a county-by-county listing of projects that were made possible by the state's land and water conservation funds. Note: The duties of the Natural Heritage Trust Fund (NHTF) were merged with the Clean Water Management Trust Fund in 2013.
